Fund activity

- December 2018 was the worst December performance for US equity markets in 50 years, with S&P 500 down 9.2% in the month. Global equities followed suit.
- The US Federal Reserve (the Fed) in a unanimous decision hiked Fed funds rate again in December for the fourth time in 2018, and the ninth in this cycle, but the market disappointed through the lack of a shift to a more dovish tone.
- Oil prices continued a precipitous slide downwards as economic recession possibilities and US-China trade war fears took hold. WTI crude is down over 40% since the peak in early October.
- US Treasury yields fell dramatically as safe haven assets outperformed in the aftermath of an equity crash. 10-year bond yields fell from 3.0% to 2.7% by month end.
